2. Always have bucket of water nearby to extinguish the fire.
3. Start a wood fire.
4. When the woodfire is burning steadily as desired, add more wood as needed. The fire pit will smoke more at the beginning of combustion, and progressively emit less and less smoke as the fire pit heats up and begins re-burning it's exhaust gases. This is normal and completely related to the quality of the fire wood used, including moisture content and weather conditions.

6. Dispose of ash and fire debris in a responsible manner after the fire pit has cooled down completely.

3. Wipe the stainless steel with a micro-fiber cloth in the direction of the metal's grain to avoid streaks and smudges.
